

BACHELOR OF SCIENCE IN PUBLIC HEALTH

The Bachelor of Science in Public Health (BSPH) degree provides initial training for students interested in the broad and diverse field of public health. The BSPH will have a general public health focus that exposes students to areas such as health promotion, epidemiology, environmental health, and health informatics. Students pursuing this degree will be prepared to pursue entry-level employment in the public and private sector, or to pursue more specialized training in the Master of Public Health (MPH) and similar programs.
