The Joint Master's of Social Work is a unique collaboration between Texas Woman's University and the University of North Texas. The two institutions collaboratively offer an MSW program that is built on the traditions of two longstanding and highly respected BSW programs as well as the strengths and resources of both institutions.

Students in the program are assigned to and register at a "home institution," but attend classes on both campuses and are taught by faculty members from both universities. Students are members of both campus communities with full library privileges, access to course management systems, and other important resources.
