The M.A. degree in Multicultural Women's and Gender Studies focuses on issues related to understanding difference, identity, and power across a variety of contexts. Through a theoretically rigorous transdisciplinary curriculum, we offer students a unique opportunity to combine social-justice issues with transformational, multicultural scholarship. In addition to coursework and a culminating project (either a thesis or a comprehensive exam), students may work with community organizations and participate in professional development and mentoring programs. Graduates of our program work in a range of careers and social justice groups, such as organizations that serve minoritized communities, creative and arts-based projects, as well as businesses and corporations. Some have also pursued Ph.D. programs in fields such as women's and gender studies, traditional academic disciplines, law, and public policy. Students may apply to begin the program in the fall or spring semester. The program reviews applications throughout the year.
